

Guidelines for Nature Camps

Kerala is endowed with rich flora and fauna. Survival of flora and fauna is in grave danger because of the rapid spurt in human population and its ever-increasing needs. Environment, resources and population stresses determine the quality of human life. To provide better quality of life now and for the generations to come, environmental awareness has to be created among the people of all ages. Forest department started Nature Camps for students during the early nineteen eighty's. There after demands from others arose and the department started organizing Nature Camps for students and other interested groups regularly. At present, there is no uniformity in curriculum content and duration. To ensure the Nature Camps more educative and informative, the following guidelines are issued.

1. Target groups:

Nature Camps shall be organized separately for the following target groups:-
